Mr. J. M. Libby, the janitor at the State House, met with a very painful accident, Tuesday. He was commencing to clean out the council chamber and was letting down one of the heavy windows of the room, when both cords holding the weights broke at the same time, letting the window fall upon his thumbs, both balls of which were badly crushed and torn almost from the bone. It was an exceedingly painful accident, and it will probably take some time for the injured thumbs to heal.

The furno buildings of Mr. Benson B
Weed, of Unity, were burned last week. It is stated that Mr. Woed went to his barn in the evening with a lighted kerosene lantern, and undertook to go up a ladder for the purpose of eatching some hens, but the ladder fell, and he came down, setting fire to the hay. Besides the hay and grain some hon, a mowing machine, a horse-rake, and other farming tools that were in the harn were burned. Most of the household goods were saved. The buildings and their contents were said to be insured for about $1,400. M₁. Weed has moved to Freedom village:

The bird dives, swims under water for eight or ten yards, comes up and is down aguin, working very rapidly and constantly taking fish. When the fishes are small, the bird is allowed to retain two or three in his throat at a time, but a fair-sized fish is immediately taken from him and put into the basket. During a space of half an hour fifteen fishes were taken, which was pronounced a good catch, considering the brightness of the night. The largest of these fishes, which were all of the same species, were nine to ten inches in length, mance, a picture of Italian life, delicately and gracefully painted, and full of poetry and pathos. The series of undergraduate sketches of life in the principal colleges of the United States is brought to a close by R. S. Roued's Social Life at Amherst College. Felix L. Oswald's article, A Modern. Spartness, detailing the adventures and Spartners, detailing the adventures and exploits of a bandit, who for several years back has defied the Mexican authorities and encountered many thrilling adventures, is a biographical sketch of the utmost interest. Another valuable article is Prof. John Johnson, Jr.'s The Schools Boy as a Microcosm, in which the customs and morals and economic principles of the average school-boy are, shown to reflect those of semi-civilized and savage periods of the human race. The Story of a Stan-za, by John R. Tait, is one of the bits of literary autoblography for which this Magazine is famous. Arla Bates's A Sketch in Umber is a story of unusual power and insight. The most important of the poems is contributed by Walt Whit-man, and is entitled November Boughs. Excellent verses are also contributed by Mary Bradley and Willis Boyd Allet. The departments are interesting as usual.

The Bogton Heraid in that there is a growing sentiment in favor of "tariff reform" in the West, and predicts that in the next Congress there will be a number of these Western Repui leans who can be counted upon to support even a Democratic measure of tariff reform. This claim has a familiar sound. When the Morrison bill came before the Hodse for a second time it was strongly asserted that in view of this same alleged tariff reform sentiment in the West a number of the Republicans from that section could be counted.

The Bogton Heraid in that there is a face like superbly polished beads of black oncy. "The mone ent the actress becomes an individual and the audience begins to say, "Oh, what a lovely dress? then she loss her power Dresses, if too gorgoous, will detract not only from the play, but the weare of them as well. I believe in baving everything suitable, especially as to costume, but no in making the dresses the control of the dresses and it interpreter. Stage setting ought to be a picture, but not too glaring. I am not alarmed at the possibility of any error in that respect, Mirs. Potter's good taste and high breeding would prevent any such mistake."

WHATA MANAGER THINES licans from that section could be counted upon to sustain the bill, but when the test came it was found that the Republicans presented practically an urbroken front in opposition to a measure calculated to work so much mury If our Bos on contemporary desires some tangible systemes of the tariff sentiment in the West ! might re-fresh its memory as to the returns from Mr Morrison s district in the last election It is reported that the Democratic man agers are making an effort o induce the resented by Mr Midrison that district will send to the House the strunchest kind of a

Manager Richard Dorney, of Daly's Theatre, was found in the artistic little private office of that attractive olaphonse looking quite contented and sweet in a cress suit, with small, diamond pitted gold studs in his shirt front

'It is a difficult thing to say what Mrs Potters prospects are, 'said Mr Dorney' She had desired to open at Mr. Daly's theatre, but her will rould not be fulfilled as our senson opened too soon o permit All we can judge from are appearances tased on her success in London, the quality of which everytody knows 'She will probably come out ill right, as her manager is advertising her appearance judiciously and largely, and the fact that sents are being auctioned indicates that her first night will be attended by a big crowd I er Eurupean reputation and her sociat career here in New York ought to bring her a worthy share of patronage "

MR PALMIR PESSIMISTIC Manager Palmer, of the Madison Square Theatre, was peskir datic in his views up-on the prospects of Mrs Potter, and in financial lingo, was on the bear side of the market

"Nobody will dety hat experience is an "Nobody will det y hat experience is an essonial element of aucesa," said Mr Palmer "If Mrs Poter scores a success it will be due to curiosity. She is beginning at the wrong and of the ladder People without experience who have made a popular success and had money poured into their laps will idmit themselves that their success was due to their beauty or their history Mrs. Langlay is a shining example of that face Mrs Potter is very pretty and possessés much personal mag netism. She has many friends in New Vork who will or wel into the theatre to see her. She has my lost wishes?"

COUNTESS NARONA.

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

CHAPTER III. There was a time when a man in search of the pleasures of gossip sought the society of ladles. The man knows better now. He goes

There was a time when a man'in search of the pleasures of gossip sought the society of ladies. The man know better now. He goes to the smoking roop of his club.

Dr. Wybrow lighted, his cigar and looked round him at his brittene in social conclave assembled. The room was well filled, but the flow of talk was still Languid. The doctor innocently applied the stimulant that was wanted. When he inquired if anybody knew the Countess Narrona he was answered by sbruething like a shout of astonishment. Never the countess narrona he was answered by sbruething like a shout of astonishment. Never the countess narron and a such an absurd question been asked before! Every human creature, with the slightest clair to a place in society, knew the Countess Narrona. An adventuress with a European reputation of the blackest possible color—such was the general description of thelwoman with the death like complexion and the glittering eyel.

Descending to particulars, each member of the club contributed his own little stock of scandal to the memoirs of the countess. It was doubtful whether she was really what sin called herself, a Dalmatian lady. It was doubtful whether she had ever been married to the count whose widow she assumed to be. It was doubtful whether she had ever been married to the count whose widow she assumed to be. It was doubtful whether she had ever been married to the baron she problem as a given by accompanied ber in he travels funder the name of Baron Rivar, and in the character of her brother) was her brother at all. Report whispered that his so called sister had narrowly escaped being implicated in a famous trial for poisoning at Vienna—that she had been known as as my in the naterest of Austria—that hig "apartment" in Paris had been known as a gambler at every "table" on the continent. Report whispered them is such abused woman and declared that her character had been most cruelly and most unjustly assiled. But as the man was a lawyer, his interference went for nothing; it was asked derisively what he though Hearing this the doctor ruised another shout of astonishment by inquiring the 1 ame of the goaleman whom the countess was about to marry.

He friends in the smoking room decided unanimously that the celebrated physician must be a second "Rip Van Winkle," and that he had just awakened from a supernatural sleep of twenty years. It was all very well to say that he was devoted to his profession, and that he had neither time nor inclination to pick up fragments of gossip at timere parties and beills. A man who did not know that the Countess Narona had berrowed money at Homburg of no less a person-than Loni Montbarry, and had then deluded limino making her a proposal of marriage, was a man who had probably never heard of Lord Montbarry bimself. The younger men bers of the chalt, tumoring the joke, sent a wifer for the nobleman in question, for the doctor's benefit—with illustrative indessels of information interpolated by themselves.

"Herbert John Westwick, First Baron Montharry, of Montbarry, King's county, Ireland. Creaped a peer for distinguished military services in India. Forty-tight years old, doctor at, the present time, Not married. Will be married next yeel, doctor, to the delightful creature iwe have been taking about. Heir presumptive, his lordship's next brother, Stephen Robert, narried to Fir Theodore Burville, Bart, and han issue, three laughters. Younger brothers of his lordship's francis and Henry, unmarried to Fir Theodore Burville, Bart, and Anne, widow of the late Peter Nortury, Esq., of Norbury Cross. Bear his lordship relations well in mind, doctor. Three brothers Westwick, Stephen, Francis and Henry, and two sisters, Lady Barville and Mrs. Norbury. Not one of the flavourille present at the marriage, and not due of the flav will leava a stone unturned to story it if the countess will only give them a chance. A let o hese hostife members of the formily moder offeuded relative not mentioned in The Ferage, a young lady"—

A sudden hutburget of protest in more than one part of the room istopped the one part of the room stopped the coming disclosure and released the doctor from furthers persecution.

"Don't mention the poor girls name; it's too had to make a joke of that just o, the business; she has behaved nobly ander shameful provocation; there is but one excuse for Montherry—he is either a madman or a foel." In these terms the protest expresse itself on all sides. Speaking confidentably to his next neighbor, the doctor discovered that the lady referred to was already knowr to him (through the countess' confession) as the lady deserted by Lord Montherry. Her name was agness Lockwood. She was described as being the superior of the countess in personal attraction, and as being also by sime years the younger woman of the two. Making all allowance for the follies that men committed every day it their relations with women, Montherry's delusion on record. In this expression of opinion every man present agreed—the lawyer even included. Not one of them could call to mind the innumerable instances in which the sexual influence has proved irresistithe in the presence of whome without even the pretension to beauty. The very members of the clut whom the contract for institute in the presence of whome without even the pretension to beauty. The very members of the clut whom the contract for institute in some the presence of the clut whem the contract of the facility than of the presence of the clut whem the contract of the facility than of the contract of the clut whem the contract of the clut when the contract of th sistible in the persons of winnen without even the precusion to beauty. The very members of the club whom the cointess (in spite of her personal disadvantages) could have nest easily fascinated, if she had thought it worth her while, were the members who wondered most loudly at Montbarry's choice of a wife.

While the topic of the countess' marriago was still the one topic of conversation, a member of the club entered the smoking room, whose appearance instantly produced a dead silence. Dr. Wybrow's next neighor whispered to him, "Montbarry's brother—Henry Westwick,"

The new comer looked around him slowly, with a bitter smile.

"You are tailting of my brother, he said. "Don't mind me. Not one of you can despise him more heartly than I do. Go cn, ge themer—go on!"

nen-go on!

But one man present took the speake at his word. That man was the lawyor who had already undertaken the defense of the countess.

"I stand alone in my position, he said,
"and I am not ashamed of repeating it in "In stand alone in my position, he said, "and I am not ashamed of repeating it in anybody's hearing. I consider the Constess Narona to be a cruelly trented wor qu. Why shouldn't she be Lord Montbarry's wife! Who can say she has a mercenary motive in marrying him?"

Montbarry's brother turned, sharply or the speaker. "I say it?" he answered.

The reply might have shaken some near. The lawyer stood on his ground firmly as swer.

The laryer stood on his ground firmly as seer.

"I believe I am right," he rejetired, "in stating that his lordship's income is not more than sufficient to support his stating in life; also that it is an income derived almost entirely from landed proporty in Ireland, every acre of whoch is entailed,"

Montharry's brother made a sign, admitting that he had no objection to offer so far.

"If his lordship his first, the his yeer proceeded, "I have been informed that the only provision be can unke for he widow "on-sists in a rent charge, but the property of no more than $400 a year. His retting pension and alkowances, it is well known, die with him. Four hyddred a year is therefore all that he can leave to the counters, if he leaves her a widow."

"Four hundred a year is not all," was the "Four hundred a year. Is not all," was the

"Your hundred a yea. is not all," was the reply to this, "'My brother has insured his life for £10,000; and he has settled the whole of it on the countess, in the event of his death."

death."

This amounteement produced a strong sensation. Men looked at each other and repeated the three startling words, "Ten thousand pounds!" Driven fairly to the well, the lawyer made a last effort to defend his posisand pounds: Driven larry to the wall, the lawyer made a last affort to defend his rost-tion.

"May I sisk who made that sattlement a condition of the marriago?" he said. "Surely it was not the countess herself?"

Henry Westwick answered, "It was the countess' brother," and added, "which comest to the same thing."

After that there was no more to be saided long, at least, as Montharry's brither was present. The talk flowed into other channels, and the doctor went home.

Hut his morbid curiosity about the countees was not set at rest yet. In his leture moments be found himself wondering whether Lord Montharry's family would steesed in stopping the marriage after all. And more than this, he was conscious of a growing desirate see the infatuated man himself. Every day, during the brief interval before the wedding, he looked in at the chall, on the chance of hearing some news. Nothing had happened, so far as the chab knew.
